HOW JOHN DENT MADE HIS PILE AND LOST IT.

It was an afternoon in the latter part of September that the party with whom John Dent and Twomoky and Nevins had associated themselves, on a narrow ledge-path up the side of a mountain in Eastern Montana, rising in tier stretches, and looking down by the pommels of their saddles, they leaned over the sheer edge of the precipice and saw the promised land lying at their feet. On one side of an impetuous stream, that ran golden in the reflected glow of the remoter peaks, lay a city of tents, shanties, and rude brush wigwams, from which spiral columns of smoke slowly ascended here and there, and methodically as they noticed the upper currents of the wind. Along the canyon, following the course of the stream, were hundreds of blue and red and gray figures moving about restlessly like ants. These were miners at work. Now and then the waning sunlight caught the gleam of an upplied pick, and it sparkled like a flake of mica.

It was a lonely spot. A traveler not lighted away the spirit of solitude that hung broodingly over it since the world was made. Shut in by savage hills, stretching themselves onward like impregnable battlements, it seemed as if nothing but a miracle could lay the foot of man on its interior solitude. What a lovely, happy valley it looked, nestled with the rocky stream of sunset! No wonder the hundreds in the mountain side, gazing down on it, lingering upon its beauty.

"Dent," whispered George Nevins impressively, "there is gold here." There he sat motionless for a few minutes, taking in every aspect of the canyon. "But we will get no nuggets, mind you," he presently added in a low voice. "The wide pass you see in the mountain, running down through the valley like a swath cut by some gigantic mowing-machine, is the ancient bed of the river. The little smooth terraces that lie thick in the gulches, though we cannot see them from this height, were mighty bowlers once. The pass of the water, which maybe has not been here for thousands of years, grooved them smooth. It treated the gold with no more distinction; what there is in this place is pulverized, lying in dainty drifts or pockets, two, ten, or twenty feet down on the pipe-clay. But no nuggets, John Dent."

"But there is gold?"

"Tons—for the man that can find it."

"Let us go!" cried John Dent, plunging the spurs into his horse. The rest of the party, refreshed by the halt, followed suit, and the train swept down the mountain path, the rowels and bells of their Spanish spurs jingling like mad.

So they entered the Montana diggings.

More than once on their journey to Red Rock, which had not been without its perils, Dent and Twomoky had found Nevins' experience and readiness of great advantage to them, and that afternoon, on arriving at the canyon, they had fresh cause to congratulate themselves on having him for a comrade. Two diggers, who were working a bit below them on the ravine, had encroached on their claim, and seemed indisposed to relinquish a certain strip of soil next the stream very convenient for washing purposes. Nevins measured the ground carefully, counted up the stakes which had been removed, and set them back in their original places; then smiling, while he was doing this, but it was a wicked sort of smile, as dangerous as a sunbeam.

The men eyed him sullenly for a dozen or twenty seconds; then one of them walked up to his mate and whispered in his ear, and then the pair strolled off, glancing warily from time to time over their shoulders.

Dent and Twomoky looked on curiously. Dent would have argued the case, and proved to them, by a gleam, that they were wrong; Twomoky would have compromised by a division of the disputed tract; but Nevins was an old hand, and knew how to hold his own.

"The man who lets states in this company is rotten," said Nevins, turning to his companions. "If I had not meant fight, they would have shot me. As it was I should have shot them."

"Why, Nevins!" cried Twomoky, "what a bloodthirsty fellow you are, to be sure!"

"You wait," Nevins said. "You don't know what kind of a crowd you have got into. There and there, maybe, there's an honest fellow, but as for the rest—all sorts from the States, gamblers from San Francisco, rough's from Colorado and Nevada, and blackguards from everywhere. Our fellow-citizens in the flourishing town of Red Rock are the choice scum and sediment of society, and shall be out of my reckoning if the crack of the revolver doesn't become as familiar to our ears as the croak of the bullfrogs over there in the marsh."

Nevins had not drawn a flattering picture of the inhabitants of Red Rock; but it was as literal as a photograph.

The rumors of a discovery of rich placer diggings in Montana had flown like wildfire throughout the Territories and the border States, and caused a stampede among the classes first affected by that kind of intelligence. Two months before, the valley was a solitude. On the songs of birds, the plunge of a red-deer among the thickets, or the cry of some savage animal, broke its stillness. One day a trapper wandered by chance into the canyon, and got benighted there. In the morning, eating his breakfast, he had stuck his sheath-knife for convenience into the earth beside him; on withdrawing it he saw a yellow speck shining in the pit of clay adhering to the blade. The trapper quietly gold up and marked out his claim. He knew it could not be kept secret. A man may commit murder and escape suspicion, though "murder speaks with miraculous organs;" but he may never hope to discover gold and not be found out.

Two months afterwards there was a thriving town in Red Rock Canyon, with a population of two thousand and upwards.

There was probably never a mining town of the same size that contained more desperadoes than Red Rock in the first year of its existence. Either located on the ruffians that had made other localities too hot to hold them—generally with too much reputation, and habits with too little; and here was formed the nucleus of that gang of marauders, known as Henry Plummer's Road Agent Band, which haunted the mountain passes, plundering and murdering until the Vigilantes took them in hand and hanged them with as short ceremony and as scant mercy as they had given their fellow-men. This is a black page in the history of American gold seeking, which closes with the execution of Plummer, Ned Ray, Stinson, Gaze Lyons, Boone Helme, Frank Parrish, Jack Wagner, Dutch Joan, Cut-foot George, and Buck Graves,—their very names are a sinister omen. And these were prominent citizens of Red Rock when our little party of adventurers set up their tent and went to work on the claim in the golden valley.

"Nevins, has not this place the geological aspect of more than he has the moral character of the canyon," urged John Dent in his journal of September 30. "Gold has been found scattered in some instances among prospectors have struck rich pockets; out of those, massive nuggets weighing ounces have been taken. Nevins is a mauvais sujet, and there are none here, and no one knows of acts, so much the worse. Mem. Digging for gold, however, may elevate the imagination in theory, is practically devilish hard work."

This discovery which happens was made by one of Nevins' long before their discovered the place itself, for a week they toiled like Trojans; then they gave themselves rare leisure time to eat; at night they dropped as sleep like beasts of burden; and at the end of seven days they had found no gold. At the end of a fortnight, they had made nearly a dollar a day each—at the wages of a heavy sight, suggested that they had better look up a claim for a cemetery.

"I never like to win at first," said Nevins, generally "it brings bad luck."

"The arrows from Sacramento, down the stream are raining out seven hundred a week," remarked Twomoky.

"Our turn will come," Nevins replied, cheerfully stirring the Aqua Sen Ademo in the Aarez.

This was on Sunday. The week had knocked off work, and so had the camp generally. Sunday was a gala day. The bar rooms and the gambling saloons were thronged; at sundown the dance-houses would open—the Grizzly Bear House is it was engaged. Lounging about camp, but as is usual in a community to some extent, were a dozen unsuccessful diggers, and matters in their face are on the alert for an invitation to drink. As they Sunday an odor of mixed drinks floated up from Red Rock and hung over it in impalpable clouds.

The three friends strolled through the town on a tour of observation, and brought up at the door of a saloon where a crowd was gathered. A man had been shot at one of the tables, and his comrades were fetching him out, dead, with his revolver still smoking, clutched in his hand. The owning the corpse was a tall individual, apparently the chief mourner, carrying the deceased man's hat on a stick. The crowd opened right and left to let the procession pass, and our friends came in upon it.

Dent and Twomoky turned away, sickened by the spectacle. Nevins looked on with an expression of fascinated curiosity, and stroked his long, yellow beard.

"Are this is Sunday," thought John Dent. "In Riverworth, Uncle Jacob is ringing the bell for the afternoon service. Uncle Dent and my little girl are sitting in the aisle-backed wagon, I can see them now! Uncle Ralph is preparing to go to sleep. True looking like a rose, and Parson Wilard, God bless his old white head! going up the pulpit stairs in his best coat shiny at the seams. Outside are the great silver poplars, and the quiet street, and the sunshine like a blessing lying over all."

The close atmosphere of the saloon stifled him as he conjured up this picture. He longed to be alone, this dropping silently behind his companions, wandered off beyond the last row of waxtitos and out into the deserted ravine.

There he sat down among the rocks, and with his elbows resting on his knees, contrasted the pleasant town by the sea, of prudence and his uncle, and the old minister in Jacobs Lane. Presently he took from his pocket-book a knot of withered flowers and leaves; these he spread in the palm of his hand, with great care, and he for half an hour or more, looking at them from time to time in a way that seemed idiotic to a solitary gentleman in a bushed and haggard over-coat who was digging in a pit across the gulley. What sad things will entertain a man when he is alone! This handful of faded hibiscus blossoms made John Dent forget the thousands of weary miles that stretched between him and New England, by conveying it so, in its pathetic fashion, through the air back to the little Yankee seaport as if it had been Fortunatus's magic cap.

It was sunset when Dent sauntered pensively into camp, meeting Twomoky and Nevins on the outskirts, looking for him.

"Jacob! Jacob Dent!" Twomoky, "you have given me such a turn! It really isn't safe in this place for a fellow to go off mooning by himself. What on earth have you been doing?"

"Something quite unusual, I assure you,—I've been thinking."

"Domestic death?" said Nevins.

"Just a little."

Then they walked on in silence. Nevins stopped abruptly.

"What's that?"

"A bit of rock I picked up out yonder; say what it is, Nevins," and Dent tossed the fragment to Nevins who caught it deftly.

"Pyrites," said Nevins, flinging it away contemptuously. "Come and have some supper."

The instant they were inside the tent Nevins laid his hand on Dent's shoulder.

"Do you happen to remember the spot where you picked up that—bit of rock?"

"Yes, why?"

"Nothing,—only it was as fine a specimen of silver as we shall be likely to see."

"Silver!" stamped John Dent, "and you threw it away!"

"Hush! go get it directly, if you be quiet. Do you see those two fellows watching us? They have looked as if they were there to keep his eye open on the Sabbath day."

He was a character, this Nevins, in his way, though I would be difficult perhaps to state just what his trade was. In the gulches, with the diggers, he was simply a miner who became a partner in the horse-like a Comanche; when a quiet or in science or literature came up, as sometimes happened between Dent and Nevins, he talked like a man who had read and thought. "Nevins has evidently received a collegiate education," John Dent writes in his journal, "and certainly a gentleman, though what it is that constitutes a gentleman is an open question. It is not culture, for I have known ignorant men who were gentlemen, and learned scholars who were not; it is not money, nor grace, nor goodness, nor station. It is something intangible, the poetry, the Nevins has it."

From the hour Dent met him at Salt Lake City, he had seen a puzzle to the two New Englanders; nor did the mystery were so out of accordance with his circumstances. He, as for instance, so when John Dent's Nevins was concerned, he did not pretend to speculate, he did not pretend to speculate, he seemed to have nothing to do. One fact was clear to the weight of gold to him.

"An account of the careers of these men is to be found in a curious little work by Prof. Thomas J. Dimsdale, of Virginia City, who narrowly escaped writing a very novel himself when he wrote The Vigilantes of Montana.

Perhaps there was more fun in John Dent's picture of the handcuffed ruffians puzzling over the rhetoric of Jacob's epistle.

John Dent's visions of wealth would have been realized in a month or two, but unfortunately the silver lode, as if resenting his curious generosity, more favors. It did worse than that, it ran into the next claim.

"This is a name we cannot follow it," said Nevins; "out we—or rather you—have made a fair haul."

"My luck is your luck and Twomoky's," Dent replied.

They had, as Nevins observed, made a fair haul. Their pile was so large now, and its reputation so much exaggerated, that they took turns in guarding the tent, only two going to work at a time. The presence of thieves in the camp had been successfully demonstrated within the month, and the fear of being robbed settled upon them like a nightmare. Dent had another apprehension, the coming of the cold season. Nevins reassured him on that point. Though the Winter was severe in Montana, they were in a sheltered valley; at the worst, there would be only a few weeks when they could not work.

The silver exhausted, they fell to prospecting. After varying fortunes for a month or two, they had another find, Twomoky being the involuntary discoverer.

It was good on this occasion, and though it did not yield so bonteously as the silver lode, it paid handsomely.

So the weeks wore away, and the young men saw their store steadily increasing day by day. It was heart-breaking work sometimes, and back-breaking work always; but it was the kind of work that makes a man willing to have his back, if not his heart, broken.

The Winter which Dent had looked forward to so apprehensively was over, and had been propitious to the gold hunters. Spring-time again in the valley, to the very prime with color and perfume, as a goblet is filled with wine. Then the long Summer set in.

At this work John Dent had refrained from writing home; it was his design to take Prudence and his uncle by surprise, by walking unheralded into Willowbrook some happy day with his treasures.

Those treasures had now become a heavy care to the young men. "We sleep the dust and more"—I am quoting from the journal—"in a stout canvas box set into the earth at the foot of the tent-pole, and one of us lies across it at night. There have been two attempts to rob us. The other night Joe turned over in his sleep, and found himself clutching a man by the legs. An empty boot was left in his hand, and a black figure darted out of the tent. There was a search; the next morning, for that other boot. There were plenty of men with two boots, and not a few with none at all; but the man with one boot was wanting, and well for him if he had been caught it would have been death on the spot; the boldest scoundrels in camp would not have assisted at his execution, for there's nothing so cliquish knaves as crime of this sort,—when they do not commit it themselves."

The morning after this attempt at burglary,—it was the second,—the following conversation took place:—

"It will never do for us to keep this here," said Nevins; "there is at least thirty thousand dollars. I could pick you out fifty men in Red Rock who would murder us for a tenth of it."

"What can we do with it?" asked John Dent.

"There's an agent here of Treston & Co.'s who will give us drafts on Salt Lake City, or turn it into bank-notes at a fewish discount."

"But suppose they should be stolen?" suggested Nevins.

"Suppose Treston & Co. should fail?"

"That is true, again," observed Nevins.

The bank notes were decided on, and thirty-two slips of crisp paper, each with an adorable Mon, were sewed upon a leather pocket-book which they buried in the middle of the tent, pitching their saddles over the hiding-place.

They had now been nearly twelve months at the diggings, and John Dent's share in the property reached five figures. It was not the wealth of his dreams; every day in Wall Street then made three times as much by a scratch of the pen; but it was enough to set him on his feet. With ten thousand dollars in his pocket he could ask Prudence Parley to marry him. Red Rock was overrun, and the supply of metal giving out. He remained without digging on fresh finds, what he had would make; away the snow in the March sunshine. Was it worth while to tempt fortune further? was it risky that two such golden winnings would happen to one same mortal? These questions to Nevins and Twomoky, who were aware of the stress that drew him to New England. They knew his love affair by heart, and had even seen a certain small photograph which John Dent had brought with him from Rivermouth.

Nevins decided his own intention to hold on by Red Rock. Twomoky was for instantly returning home. With ten thousand dollars in the Nauli us Bank at Rivermouth, he would snap his fingers at Count Monte Cristo himself, who, by the way, was as real a personage to Twomoky as John Jacob Astor. The two New Englanders decided to join the next large party that started for the East.

The incalculable sums which our friends were imagined to have accumulated, rendered their positions critical. They took turns regularly on the night-watch now, and waited with increasing impatience for the making up of a train to cross the mountains.

Red Rock had not improved with time. It seemed and grower, like a wild caricature, with all evil passions. Men who might have been decently honest if they had been decently fortunate, turned knaves. Crowds of successful diggers had already stolen the gold-dust from their feet, and departed, by the vicious remained, with there and there a reckless devil who could not get away. The newcomers, and there were strongs of them, were of the worst description. Every man carried his life in his hand, and did not seem to value it. It was suicide to stray beyond the limits of the town after dark. Tents were planted every night. Strong manifestoes against the nerves of this community, believing etc. An attempt was made by the indignant citizens of Red Rock to form a society for the purpose of suppressing the evil. They went so far as to suspend from the bough of a convenient tree a man known as the Great American Pie-Eater on account of certain gastronomic feats performed in Salt Lake City, but he proceeding taxed with down and resuscitated and revived by his executioners to stand drinks all round at Gallagher's bar, where he died.

When the Vigilantes sprung into existence, they managed these things differently in Montana, for they hanged the man down so soon.

"We had seen wave of ourselves," said Twomoky, describing Red Rock to the superior, "we have seen [illegible] Rock."

But there was, it seemed, something about Nevins that had a depressing effect upon the spirits of sanguine young gentlemen in camp.

One morning just before daybreak, John Dent awoke suddenly and sat up in his blankets, trembling from head to foot. At what he did not know. He had not been dreaming, and it was not a noise, that had broken his sleep. He looked about him; every object stood out clearly in the twilight; Twomoky lay snoring in his space-down, but Nevins, whose watch it was, was not in the tent. Dent was somewhat struck cold by that. He rolled out of the blankets, and crawling over to the spot where the money was hidden, felt for it under the sacks. The earth around the place had been newly turned up, and the pocket-book was gone!

The pocket-book was gone, and one of the three shovels—Nevins'—was missing. The story told itself. The outcries of the two men brought a crowd of diggers to the tent.

"We have been robbed by our partner," cried Twomoky, picking up a sacked by the stirrup-strap and hurrying out to the corral for his horse.

John Dent lay on the ground with his fingers and nails buried in the loose earth near the empty hole. A couple of worthies, half roughly and half compassionately, set him upon his feet.

"Did you care to know who that mate of yours was?"

The speaker was a gaunt, sunburnt man, with deer-skin leggins, fringed at the seams, and gathered at the waist by a belt, from which hung the inevitable bowie-knife and the revolver. Dent looked at him stupidly, and dimly recognized one of the two miners who had disputed the claim with Nevins that first afternoon in camp.

"I knew he'd leave with the pile, some day. But I didn't like to let on, for fear of mistakes. I thought, maybe, you other two was the same kind. I knew that man in Tuolumne County. He's a devil. He's the only man breathing I'm afraid of. No, I don't mind allowing I'm afraid of him. There's something about him, when I think of it,—a sort of dog-in-the-manger, so that I'd rather meet a Bannock war-party in a narrow gulch than have any unpleasantness with that man. Frederick King was what they called him in Tuolumne County in '56."

Several ears in the crowd pricked up at the words Frederick King. It was a name rather well known on the Pacific slope. John Dent had recovered his senses by this.

"Are there any true men here?" he cried, "that will go with me to bring back that thief?"

A dozen volunteered at once, and half an hour later twenty armed men galloped out of Red Rock Canyon.

They returned, with jaded horses, at sunset, without having struck the trail of either Twomoky or Nevins. The next day, at noon, Twomoky himself rode into camp and dropped heavily out of the saddle at the door of the tent. He had a charge of buckshot in his leg. Some one had fired on him from the chaparral near Big Rose Ranche. It was not Nevins, for he had no gun, so far as known; probably some confederate of his.

And this was the end of it. This was the result of their twelve months' hardship and industry and prudence and endurance.—From "Prudence Palfrey," by T. B. Aldrich, in Atlantic Monthly.

SUPERSTITIONS ABOUT BEES.

Much more lore about bees may be picked up by any one who converses with the peasantry in almost any part of England. From some reason or other, bees are looked upon as peculiarly "uncanny" creatures. Thus we are told in Lincolnshire that bees would desert a hive on the occasion of a death in the family, unless some one knocked at their hive and told them of it. The same superstition we find to prevail in Essex, and even Cornwall. Similarly the belief that after a death hives ought to be wrapped in crape or mourning of some kind is current in Lincolnshire and East Anglia generally. It is even found in Lithuania, and is probably connected with an ancient idea that honey was a symbol of death. In Yorkshire there is a custom of inviting bees to the funeral. If a wild bee should enter a Northampton cottage, it is deemed a certain sign of death; if a swarm of bees alight on a dead tree, or the dead branch of a living one, there will be a death in the family within the year. It is curious why the bees should, in Europe, be so connected with death, whereas, in Hindoo mythology, the bow-string of Kama (the Hindoo Cupid) is formed of bees, perhaps, as a symbol of love strong as death. It is worth while mentioning one or two more bee superstitions. They will never thrive, it is said, in a quarrelsome family, nor when they have been stolen. There can be no greater piece of ill-luck than to purchase a swarm; it must always be given, and then (the custom is to return something for it in kind—a small pig, say, or some other equivalent). Money should be avoided in the transaction as much as possible. In Hampshire it is a common saying that bees are lucky or unfortunate in their work whenever there are wars. At the rise of being esteemed credulous, we may remark that the martial year (1870) was an unlucky honey year. East winds are thought seemed in that year to have repressed the secretion of honey in the nectaries of many flowers.

We see in one of the papers a paragraph from a Washington letter, which says it costs the Government two thousand dollars to carry a congressman who dies at the capital. We should doubt if we have come across another statement of the following effect: "Recently an eccentric Englishman died and left fifty pounds in his will to a London gas company on condition that it should convert him into gas in one of its crucibles." Now, if it really practicable to make gas out of an ordinary human being, imagine how enormous would be the quantity that could be made from an average congressman, who is largely composed of gas! Therefore, instead of spending so much more money for funerals, we insist that hereafter every deceased congressman shall be turned over to the gas company to be worked up and run through a meter and sold by the cubic foot. It would be an unusually exhilarating experience to read a newspaper by the light of a vaporized congressman, and to turn that congressman out when we get into bed! There are many congressmen who never will throw light on anything unless they are put through a crucible and emitted from a burner.—Gas Fixter.

A professor of legerdemain entertained an audience in a Scotch village, which was principally composed of colliers. After "astonishing the natives" with various tricks, he asked for a sixpenny. A collier, with a little education, handed out the coin, which the professor received, and then said, addressing the audience, "Ladies and gentlemen, I will now show you how I can change this sixpenny into a farthing. "Ah!" cried the collier, who had examined the coin, "ye canna do that!" "I can do it, sir," said the professor. "Ye canna do it, ye ken ye canna!" "I can do it, sir, and I will do it." "Ye canna do it, ye ken ye canna!" "I will do it, sir, and I will do it." "Ye canna do it, ye ken ye canna!" "I will do it, sir, and I will do it." "Ye canna do it, ye ken ye canna!" "I will do it, sir, and I will do it." "Ye canna do it, ye ken ye canna!" "I will do it, sir, and I will do it." "Ye canna do it, ye ken ye canna!" "I will do it, sir, and I will do it." "Ye canna do it, ye ken ye canna!" "I will do it, sir, and I will do it." "Ye canna do it, ye ken ye canna!" "I will do it, sir, and I will do it." "Ye canna do it, ye ken ye canna!" COLORADO SPRINGS GAZETTE

AND EL PASO COUNTY NEWS.

Official Paper of El Paso County.

MARCH 7, 1874.

THE LOCAL PAPERS. You owe it to yourselves to give a liberal support, and exact from them as high a character as you would from any educator in your midst. This is in no sense a matter of choice and care for it is your representative. Indeed, in its character, it is the summation of the importance, interest and welfare of your town. It is the aggregate of your own consequence, and you cannot ignore it without miserably depreciating yourselves. New York Times.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

A cross on the wrapper of the GAZETTE signifies that the subscription has expired, and that the paper will be stopped. Those who wish it to be continued are requested to renew their subscriptions as soon as they see the cross.

Professor HASKELL, the Financial Agent of the College, paid a visit to Colorado Springs a few days ago, previous to starting for the East, to collect funds for the institution. We are pleased to learn that he has been soliciting in Denver, and that he has met with very encouraging success. He hopes to start East in about ten days, and it is believed that he will obtain sufficient funds to warrant the Trustees in breaking ground for the College Building early this Spring.

Mr. GEORGE SUMNERS, the architect for the Colorado Springs Company, has been instructed to prepare designs for complete College Buildings, so that such portion as may be built this year, will form part of one harmonious plan. It is proposed to begin work first upon the Central Building.

It is probable that classes will be formed previous to the erection of the Buildings, temporary rooms being made use of for the purpose. This will doubtless attract a considerable number of students at once, and will thus furnish an incentive for pushing work upon the Buildings, as rapidly as possible.

Our people have a deep interest in the success of this enterprize, and will be glad to learn that the Trustees have been so prompt and energetic in the arrangement of the preliminaries, and that the prospects are so favorable.

There is already a considerable influx of Visitors into Town. We notice this week on the register at the Colorado Springs House the names of several from the states of New York, Pennsylvania, and Kentucky, and the Mountain House has also several guests from various parts of the Union. Judging from appearances, we shall have many thousands of Visitors during the Season, and it will be well for our people to be preparing for them. Our hotels have had a good run of business through the Winter, and many have been occupied to a full extent of their capacity, and there can be no doubt that, in a month or two, they will have difficulty in meeting the demands for accommodation. Other or two large Hotels, conducted in first-rate style would be good investments to-day in Colorado Springs, and we presume it will not be long before capitalists avail themselves of the opportunity which is offered in this direction. But meanwhile private families will do well to prepare such accommodations as they may be able to afford. It would be a good thing for us to have to turn any doubtful guests away.

A project is on foot for the establishment of Public Gardens, with a Museum and Menagerie in connection. Major A. ARMSTRONG is pushing, we believe, to appropriate a suitable piece of ground for the purpose, one or two gentlemen have volunteered to stock a Museum, others are ready to contribute some Zoological specimens, and there is a small amount of money available to form the nucleus of a fund for the erection of necessary buildings. If therefore, our citizens are inclined to take hold of the project with any spirit, they have very favorable circumstances to work upon.

Such a scheme, if it can be carried out, will add largely to the attractiveness of the Town, and this is a matter for us to be constantly aiming at. We have abundant natural advantages in the way of scenery, climate, etc., but these alone are not all that are needed to make a thoroughly attractive place of resort. Visitors, when they come hither, want to be interested and entertained; if they have no higher object than to gaze at the mountains and drink soda water, they will soon grow tired and go off in search of fresh fields. And for this reason, it becomes wise to provide as many means of attraction and amusement for our guests as possible.

Dancing Parties, such as contemplated, with the adjuncts we have named, and with others that will doubtless be associated hereafter, would be of much service in this direction. A pleasant promenade (with, perhaps, a Band of Music in the centre)—shady nooks, comfortable seats, fountains and flowers—these would serve to while away many an hour that would otherwise hang heavy on the hands. And a good collection of Zoological, Mineralogical, and other productions of the Rocky Mountains would be of interest to probably every Visitor who came. As yet, we believe there is no such collection in the Territory; there are one or two good Cabinets of Minerals, but these are of a semi-private character. The formation of a thoroughly good collection at Colorado Springs would, therefore, not only be of interest to our own guests, but would probably bring us many Visitors—of scientific tastes—who might otherwise make choice of other places of resort in the Territory.

Here is a matter which it will pay our Merchants, Hotel-keepers, Liverymen and others to take hold of.

When you have read your paper, mail it to some friend back East.

Over three hundred people in the Methodist Church on Sunday evening last.

Now that Mr. Kimball and his snare-drum have returned to Town, the Cornet Band can get to work with renewed vigor.

Without the aid of advertisements a comparative cipher in any speculations; have the most complete faith in "printer's ink." Advertising is the royal road to business."—Barnum.

The Revival Meetings continue in the Methodist Church. We understand that thirty-two members have been added to the Methodist Church, and six to other Churches during the services.

The Unity Church Sociable was held in Bourget's Hall on Wednesday evening last. Music, Singing, Dancing, and Conversation made up the Entertainment. Those present seemed to enjoy themselves heartily.

Colorado City had a Calico Ball on Wednesday evening. Calico costs very well for ladies, and might often be worn by them to advantage if they could only think so, but when the men put it on, they look uncommonly like convicts.

Messrs. Leonard & Son have moved into their new quarters on Tejon Street. They have a fine store and a fine stock, and are now prepared to clothe the population of the whole of Southern Colorado, or therein-outs.

Mr. D. Raymond has secured the contract for the woodwork on Witham & Holmes' Building, just north of Cutler & Donovan's on Tejon Street. He also has the contract for a residence for Mr. Blanchard, to be built near Mr. Fritz's, on the other side of the creek.

With the College north, and the Court-house south, the Deaf and Dumb Asylum east, and the Capital Buildings nobody knows where, it is becoming a rash to prophesy just in what direction the Town is going to grow. It looks fair to spread rapidly in all directions.

Lieut. Greeley, of the U. S. Signal Service, who came out here to investigate the Pike's Peak Fraud, left on Wednesday for Washington. His report will be anxiously waited for by some of our people.

A car-load of coal of carbo to Town on Wednesday, consigned to Messrs. Taylor & Brother. They will probably be able to supply some of our other dealers in the commodity at even lower rates than they can buy for East, as coal is going up rapidly in price, and Messrs. Taylor bought before the beginning of the rise.

Having occasion to eulogize Colorado weather so frequently, it is quite a relief to be able to say now and then that it hasn't been anything that could be desired. And this may be said of this week's weather.

Pueblo County has voted $350,000 in bonds in aid of the Pueblo and Salt Lake Railway enterprise. Judging from its past history, it might almost be said that Pueblo could vote more bonds and get less railways in a given time, than any other place in creation; but—"if you don't succeed at first, try, try again."

A number of ranchmen in the northern part of the Territory have begun their Spring plowing and several have sown their wheat. One man in the neighborhood of Longmont put in about one hundred acres last week. Let our Southern farmers bestir themselves.

The Las Animas Leader reports the proceedings of the Literary Club there as follows:—Mr. Zamar proposed as a question: "Should we be bored or bounced?" when Mr. Brown, another member, wickedly moved as a substitute: "Shall the society be bored or Barbour bouncer?" whereupon there was disorder, and the chair bouncer was unable to quell it.

An interesting lecture on the Bible was delivered in the Methodist Episcopal Church, on Sunday morning last, by the Rev. Professor Haskell, of Denver, the Financial Agent of the Colorado College. Professor Haskell secured much to the interest of his lecture by exhibiting a number of relics which he collected while in Palestine.

The Denver and Rio Grande Railway is carrying numerous passengers bound for the San Juan Country.

Have no respect for a man who has to see the public praise to earn his private dry.

Eighty-two guests at the Colorado Springs Hotel, and twenty-seven at the Mountain House during the last week.

The affairs of the Brick Company seem to be such a hopeless tangle that it is well nigh impossible to straighten them out.

The Denver Herald of last Saturday announces, with a confidence which leaves no room for lingering doubt, that "Chang and Eng are dead."

Messrs. Meyer & Shinn have removed their Barber Shop to Cowen's new Brick building, on Tejon street, where they have Bath-rooms in connection with their business.

The Rev. A. L. Lowrie, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, has gone east to recruit an invalid mother; his pulpit will be supplied during his absence by the Rev. Robert Macauley, of Chicago.

The Maxwell Grant having been declared public property, and open for pre-emption, a number of our citizens contemplate taking a trip down it order to secure portions of it.

"Outlying Bets" continue to go off like hot cakes. Some are betting on cultivation, some on speculation—in anticipation of the time when more "additions" will be needed.

Mr. J. J. Curtis got back to Town on Wednesday, after about a week's absence in the northern part of the Territory, looking after his Stock interests. We are glad to learn that, thus far, his cattle have wintered extremely well.

The card of Dr. Bissell will be found in another column. The Doctor is already very favorably known to our citizens, and many of them will be pleased to learn that he has decided to locate here and practice.

We learn that the Lodge of Good Templars is in a flourishing condition, now numbers seventy members, and the meetings are well attended, and of a very interesting character.

Mr. O. P. Pesey of the firm of Avery, Adams & Co., De Norte, gave us a pleasant call on Monday last. He seemed to be much pleased with his new home and with business prospects.

Mr. Peter Becker has absorbed into his store the adjoining building, and now has a little more elbow-room than formerly. We always like to see a tradesman compelled to enlarge his business premises.

The sidewalk in front of the La Veta House ought to be either repaired or removed; it is now in a very dangerous condition. A Town which has many strangers in it at no gas-lamps needs to have its sidewalks kept in good order.

People look suspiciously at the front of Mrs. Wright's Stone Building, on Tejon street, and then each other to see who is "coming forward." It is not thus a matter that our Town Trustees ought to investigate; so that if there be any danger, steps may be taken to obviate it?

Work has been begun on the Public Cisterns referred to in another paragraph. The Trustees have acted wisely, we think, in electing upon this precaution against fire. Hitherto we have had a happy immunity from such calamity, but the necessity for a ready water supply may arise at any time.

It has been rumored that Sacker and Brown are not the only persons who shared in the fraud in the Signal Service Department, but that one or two well-known citizens of Colorado Springs were also implicated. What truth there may be in the rumor we cannot say, but time will doubtless show.

Now that we have two Building Associations in operation, we may expect Building to be more lively than ever. The coming Summer will doubtless see a very large increase in the number of both Residence and Business Houses. Lots are being sold at a rapid rate, and a large number of them will be "improved" within the next few months.

Advertising is a driver which draws customers. Advertising is the celebrated magnetic stone—it draws everybody and this will hold up to the point. You might as well try to make a dead man swim up stream as to keep people from buying of a liberal advertiser. This is the experience of every man who has tried it.

If our people have any of the milk of human kindness in their breasts, they will put into office at the coming election, at least a score of Town Trustees, four or five Town Clerks, half a dozen Constables and Road Overseers, for we hear that there are already so many candidates, that nothing less will satisfy them all, and what good is a community if it can't find places for its office-seekers?

A regular meeting of the Town Trustees was held on Saturday evening last, when there was a full board present. Several bills were passed. A contract was let to Mr. R. Richards, for the construction of six stone-lined cisterns, for use in case of fire. The cisterns are to be located as follows: One on Cascade avenue, one on Tejon street, one on Pike's Peak avenue, and two on Colorado street. The cisterns are to be of a certain size, and the price contracted for was 75 cents per foot.

Mr. Foote's Office—which we published in our last column,—has contained a few references to our mountains, it would have been more complete. The deficiency in this respect is regretable.

Marriage is more costly now than it used to be, the license fee having come into operation on the 1st instant. As a contemporary says: "The rule is imperative, and there is no dodging it. Down goes your money or forego the wedding. For the sake of anxious lovers, we may note that the County Clerk is the man to apply to for licenses."

Mr. E. E. Higgins has engaged the services of Mr. G. M. Reed, of Auburn, N. Y., an experienced Watchmaker and Jeweler, who will be of great assistance to him in his business. We are glad to see that Mr. Higgins has already developed a trade large enough to call for the employment of an assistant.

Mr. Mayhew Cutting and Mr. Mason are building a Brick Office on Tejon Street, north of Dick & Bitter's Livery Stable. We understand that they will shortly engage in the Real Estate business. These gentlemen are also command a very large amount of capital for investment, and their entry into business cannot scarcely fail to be of considerable benefit to the Town.

We understand that Mr. E. W. Bourne, of the Signal Corps, who has been on duty at this Station since the last, will shortly be relieved, and go East, upon the recommendation of Dr. Cutter. Mr. Bourne contracted serious illness in the discharge of his duty, and we regret that his medical attendant thinks it necessary for him to leave. He has made many friends during his stay here.

We heard the renowned "Josh" lecture in Denver the other evening. We have always had a considerable liking for his writings, which contain a large amount of good common sense under a coating of queer spelling and attractive humor. Some of his sayings are like sugar-coated pills, easy to swallow and calculated to do a man good when he has got them down. But as a lecturer, he is not, in our opinion, successful. He has no attractiveness of person, or grace of manner, or pleasantness of speech, and his lectures consist of fragments of his writings, strung together, without any other connection than that of juxtaposition.

We had the pleasure, the other evening, of meeting at Dr. Kimball's, the members of the late Committee on Horticultural Premiums, the Secretary of the Colorado Springs Company, and a few other friends. The party sat down to a substantial feast, in which a number of the products of the Doctor's garden formed an important element. They were uniformly of first-rate quality, and evinced no doubt of the capabilities of Colorado soil, when properly treated. The Doctor informed his guests that he had raised successfully about a hundred varieties of vegetables, etc., and that he intended to try, during the coming season, several other varieties which have not yet been experimented upon. During the evening, the guests inspected the Doctor's Hot-house, in which he has a large number of tender plants in a very thrifty condition. We hope, before long, to give our readers the benefit of some of Dr. Kimball's experience, which we expect to put into shape for our columns. Meanwhile we can say it is sufficient to encourage all who are inclined to undertake the cultivation of their own.

The Denver News, writing about the Deaf and Dumb Institution, says: The trustees of the Deaf and Dumb Institution at Colorado Springs, have organized by the election of Dr. R. D. Bickingham as President; A. Z. Shepard, secretary, and J. S. Wolfe, treasurer. A more excellent board of officers could hardly have been chosen. No man in the Territory is better qualified for the position of president than Dr. Bickingham, whose selection will give strength and character to the institution, and insure a most excellent management. The secretary and treasurer were properly elected from Colorado Springs, and are gentlemen of most excellent business capacities. A best fit site of ten acres has been chosen; and arrangements have been made for immediately putting the institution into operation. We congratulate the people on the prospective success of so beneficent an enterprise.

Writing of Spring prospects, the Denver Tribune says: So far as Colorado is concerned, the people can enjoy a considerable measure of local prosperity while more or less stagnation exists in the East. The mining industry gives every indication of a prosperous year. The farmers are awakening to the fact that they can raise a home market for at least $1,500,000 more of produce, and will devote a large portion of this amount to home; the cattle and sheep interests will swell the volume of production, while some progress will be made in various manufacturing enterprises. The South Park will reach Morrison, and possibly Pine Cliffe by July; the Rio Grande will complete their southern extension, while the Colorado Central promises to connect its rails with the Union Pacific at Cheyenne before the middle of the Summer. We believe the Territory will be overrun this Summer with persons looking for various kinds of investments—a class of men attracted thither by last year's panic, to distribute a portion of the immense amounts of capital now in the aggregate in Colorado. We look to the coming Summer to open good solid prospects, to which success the present stringency of the money market, and the advantages which every people is composed of.

More snow, which means plenty of grass and plenty of water during the Summer.

Mr. J. S. Wolfe and daughter, and Mr. Jim B. Young and son and daughter, left on Thursday last, for New York. They expect to be away for some weeks.

Messrs. Gale & Hoffman are making good progress with their new Building on Huerfano Street. We understand that they intend to convert the upper story into Lodge purposes.

More offices are needed in Town. A professional gentleman was inquiring search for one during nearly the whole of one day this week, and could find nothing to meet his requirements.

The new appointed and confirmed Surveyor General, Col. Seargent, is on his way to Colorado, and is expected to arrive at an early day.

The Good Templars propose to give a Musical and Dramatic Entertainment, in aid of their Lodge, in the course of three or four weeks.

Messrs. True & Sutton expect to receive next week an invoice of 20,000 pounds of Freight for Saguache, which will be shipped from this point.

If you want to know all about the San Juan Country, buy a copy of the double number of OUR WEST, which contains an exhaustive description of that portion of the Territory. Price 50 cents, to be had at the GAZETTE Office.

"Sinbad," of the Georgetown Miner, has ascertained by careful computation that, including the pay of assistant firemen and interpreters, Colorado legislation, at the recent session, was worried through at a cost of twenty-six and a half cents a minute.

At a meeting held at Chicago recently of the owners of the Little Giant mine in the San Juan country, an assessment of twenty-five thousand dollars was levied for the purpose of putting in additional necessary improvements, and vigorously prosecuting the development of their mine.

Mr. H. M. Russel, of Denver, has been spending several days of the past week in Colorado Springs, buying property, and taking steps for the establishment of a Livery Stable here. Mr. Russel is one of Colorado's old timers, and has had abundant experience in this line of business.

During the past week, a number of persons have got back from the San Juan country. Most of them seem to have the opinion that it is a good country for people with capital to work upon, but an unfavorable one for men without means. The early days of the Territory are here to be lived over again.

Mr. James Kirby, formerly of the firm of Kirby & Somerville, returned on Tuesday last from the Pacific Coast. He believes that, after all, there is hard to find a prettier and pleasanter town than Colorado Springs, or one where there is more work and better pay for those who are willing to take hold. He advises people who have the California Fever to try to get rid of it.

The San Juan Prospector learns that the citizens of Saguache and vicinity are taking active steps towards building a good wagon road through Cochetopa Pass, and that a subscription of five thousand dollars has already been raised for the purpose. It says three towns have been located in the mining region, one in Baker's Park, near the Little Giant mine, and two others in the Animas Valley, about forty miles distant from that mine. Of these two last, one is called Hermosa, the first in time is known as San Juan City, and the other Wilert. A number of improvements have been made at each place.

A few hours spent in Denver during the past week made us thankful for that quality in the soil of Colorado Springs, which guarantees us against mud. To get across one of the streets of our metropolis, after a slight fall of rain or snow is a thing for a man to set down among the pleasant experiences of life. Denver has many things of which to be proud, but its streets and sidewalks are not among the number.

The Fairplay Sentinel complains of the accommodations afforded to the traveling public by the Denver and South Park Stage Company. It says: "The present method of traveling by coaches is an imposition on the traveling public. We refer to the Denver and South Park Stage Company. At this end of the route there is not enough stock for the condition of the road, and what is infinitely worse, passengers, express matter and mail are promiscuously huddled into a lumber wagon, with no covering to protect them from the storm. It seems to us if the proprietors evinced a little more enterprise, stocked their road with decent coaches and sufficient stock, travel would increase, more than enough to pay the extra expenses."—Can it not be made worth while for travelers to South Park to make their journey via Colorado Springs, in preference to submitting to the discomfort and inconvenience thus set forth?

The trial of the Terrible claimant on the charge of perjury, which has lasted one hundred and forty days, resulted on Saturday in his conviction on all the charges, and he was sentenced to fourteen years' hard servitude. The jury was only a short time out. After the verdict was announced, the claimant expressed a desire to address the court, and the judge refused permission and proceeded to pass the sentence. The claimant maintained his usual composure when the sentence was pronounced. He shook hands with Mr. Kenaday, his counsel, and was then taken from the court-room, by a back door, and was seen no more. Being placed in a private carriage, he was rapidly driven to Newgate prison, much to the disappointment of an immense, though orderly crowd, which had gathered outside to see him pass.

BUSINESS HOUSES.

Most of our Merchants are preparing themselves for a large Spring Trade, by laying in extensive Stocks. During the past week several heavy consignments have been received.

Messrs. Barber & Duesley have received, during the last day or two, a large invoice of Dry Goods and Groceries, which will have to count in making trade on their already well-selected stores.

Messrs. Taylor & Bro., have, as we note in another column, received a car-load of Coal Oil, and have the invoice of a large Stock of Fancy Articles.

Wilson & Wood are receiving consignments of Glassware, etc., as most early, and always keep their large store thoroughly stocked.

True & Sutton have just received a car-load of Groceries, Boots and Shoes, Hardware, etc.

Dole & Hoffman have opened a heavy Stock for their new quarters.

Burton & Hodgman have had their store and warehouse crammed with Furniture, and are constantly replenishing their Stock as it goes down.

Leonard & Son have got into their new premises, and have a Stock of Clothing fully adequate to meet all demands.

Dr. Cutter will open a Wholesale Department very shortly in connection with the City Drug Store, and will put into it several car-loads of Drugs, Chemicals, Oils, Paints, etc.

J. J. Martin has an abundant and well-selected stock in his "Dry Goods Store."

It is evident that our Business Men are looking confidently for a large increase of Trade, and we have every reason to believe that their expectations will be realized. The Town is growing rapidly, and so is the country. New Districts, which are in some sense, tributary to us, are being opened up, and it is scarcely too much to anticipate that the Trade done by our Business Houses during the coming season will be double or treble what it was last season.

WOOL-GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

A meeting of Wool-Growers was held in Colorado Springs yesterday for the purpose of forming a Wool-Growers' Association, when an organization was effected by the election of the following officers:—President, Mr. E. L. Martin; Vice-Presidents, Col. M. Bell and Mr. Wheeler; Secretary, Mr. A. M. Merriam; Treasurer, Mr. J. L. Allen.

After the transaction of some other business, the meeting adjourned to Tuesday, the 17th instant, at 1 p. m. The meeting will take place in Mr. Martin's office. The Wool-Growers of the County are cordially invited to be present.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

A meeting of the above association was held in the Methodist Church, on Saturday evening last, Dr. F. H. Sutherland in the chair.

The Committee on Constitution and By-Laws made its report, and, after a few slight amendments, the report was adopted.

The meeting then proceeded to the election of officers for the year, the following being the result:—President, Dr. F. H. SUTHERLAND; Vice Presidents, the Rev. J. G. LOWRIE and T. H. HENDERSON; Secretary, Mr. J. W. GILLILEY; Treasurer, Mr. F. F. HUMPHREY; Directors, Messrs. J. C. WILSON, J. E. MILLER, E. S. NETTLETON, E. PAYTON, D. K. LEE, W. H. MACOMBER, and C. E. WHITE.

The Committee on Solicitation reported the donation of about two hundred volumes, and fifteen papers and magazines. Further solicitations are to be made.

Meeting adjourned until Monday evening next.

BUILDING ASSOCIATIONS.

The first monthly meeting of the Stockholders of the El Paso County Building and Loan Association, was held in the Reading Room on Monday evening last, when the first payment of dues was made, and the election of officers took place.

The dues paid in amounted to $355.

The funds in the Treasury were loaned to Mr. Hannaford, at [illegible] per cent premium.

By-Laws on "Officers" and "Loans" were adopted, and the meeting adjourned to Friday evening, for the consideration of the remaining By-Laws necessary for the government of the Association.

The regular meeting of the Pioneer Building and Loan Association was held at Justice Lyon's office, on Wednesday evening.

The monthly dues paid in amounted to over $600, and loans were made as follows: To W. B. Sherman, at $95 premium per share; to the same at $85 premium per share; to the same at $50 premium; to G. C. Howard, at $90 premium.

The salary of Mr. W. D. Gray, Secretary, was fixed at $125 per annum.

It was decided to consider, at the next meeting, the propriety of increasing the Stock of the Association by new issues and Sly issues.

WOMEN'S WHISKY WAR IN DENVER.

The Denver Tribune of Thursday says: A committee of women met yesterday, to initiate steps for a women's whisky crusade, as there being but few present, nothing was done. An adjourned meeting of those who a few days ago tried to start a demonstration at Guard's Hall, then passed the following resolutions:

Whereas, The sale of intoxicating liquors in the city of Denver, has assumed such fearful proportions, and has inflicted its curse upon us in so public and social life, and in thousands of ways tendency to injure the community; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the members of this committee, pledge ourselves to prevent the sale of liquors by every honorable means in our power, and to exert our influence upon our relatives and friends to further this object.

Resolved, That we aim for the advancement of civilization and the reformation of those who have become addicted to the use of spirituous liquors.

FIRE COMPANY.

The usual monthly meeting of the Fire Company was held in the Reading Room on Tuesday evening last, Foreman Tyler in the chair.

Mr. Delos Durfee was elected to active membership, and the resignations of Mr. Wagner and Mr. Gerald DeCoursey were received.

The Financial Secretary was instructed to present accounts to delinquent members for fines, dues, and assessments due the Company.

A discussion as to the means available for conveying the Engine to the scene of a Fire with the least possible delay, was closed by the Foreman endeavoring to secure the services of a team when occasion called for it.

The Foreman was authorized to hire the Engine Room for a place of meeting for the Company.

BISHOP SPAULDING.

The Denver News gives the following particulars respecting the Right Rev. John F. Spaulding, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona, who arrived in Denver a few days ago:

Dr. Spaulding was born at Bangor, Maine, August 25, 1828, being now in his forty-sixth year. He graduated with honors at Bowdoin College in 1853, and subsequently at the General Theological Seminary at New York. He was ordained deacon July 8, 1857; and presbyter in 1858, by Bishop Burgess, at Christ Church, Gardiner, Maine. He officiated two years at Oldtown, Maine; then at Lee, Massachusetts; and then as an assistant to Bishop Clark, of Rhode Island. In 1862, he received a call from St. Paul's Church, Erie, Pennsylvania, and in April of that year assumed pastoral charge of that parish. He has been for years with a settled rector; the church building was old and unpalatable, and an efficient, earnest worker was sorely needed. Such was Mr. Spaulding's character, when Dr. Spaulding became its pastor. When he left in answer to the call to assume the Missionary jurisdiction of Colorado, a stone church, costing $75,000, had been erected; three mission parishes had been organized—St. John's and the Cross and Crown being self-supporting, and "Trinity" nearly so; besides several mission schools, all the work of St. Paul's Church under Dr. Spaulding's charge. A more successful, or more self-sacrificing church work has seldom if ever been achieved in So[illegible] labors, covered by his people, and marked by the Church as worthy of future commendation. The Episcopal Church of this missionary jurisdiction comprehends Bishop Randall's country, the Territory of Nebraska, and the Territory of Colorado, and the Episcopal Church in New York city has name its successor. The choice fell upon Dr. Spaulding, who was chosen by the unanimous vote of the Forty bishops present. The consecration ceremonies took place on the 21st, Wednesday, December 31st, 1873. There were present Bishop McCloskey, of Michigan, presiding; Bishop Lee, of Delaware, assisted by Bishops Clark, of Massachusetts, Cox, of Western New York, and Kerfoot, of Pittsburg, besides about forty clergymen. The sermon was preached by Bishop Cox, and all the bishops present joined with the consecrating bishop in the imposition of hands, by which Dr. Spaulding was raised from a presbyter to a bishop. After a delay of a few weeks necessary for the closing up of his affairs at Erie, Bishop Spaulding has arrived in Denver. Bishop Spaulding comes to take up the work where it was left by his great predecessor. He brings a ripe scholarship, a manly zeal, an ardent enthusiasm, and the reputation of a thorough and efficient worker. In the task which this church has assigned him, that of a well suited to the position should have been chosen, is a matter of congratulation; and in entering upon his duties, he may confidently receive not only the hearty sympathy and support of churchmen, but the cordial co-operation of all who look with favor and with interest upon the growth and extension of the Christian cause.

THE PARK AND GARDEN.

NOTES FOR MARCH.

(By an Old Settler.)

The time has now come when the farmer must stir himself. To the full extent of his power, his growing season is at hand, and every preparation should be made for it. All the available manure should be spread out, if it should be done without clearing, no doubt it blows should be burning whenever the weather will permit.

Wheat may now be sown. Get good seed, procure it, clean of smut and oats. It is an advantage to soak the seed in lime-stone water or strong lime for about twelve hours, drying it afterwards by mixing it in fine powdered lime. Oats should not be sown until April.

The next most important thing to planting is to have crops put into good order, for without ready means for a bountiful supply of water when it is needed, it is useless to look for good crops. We will suppose that the Gardener has his manure, manured. Let it be spread at the earliest possible time and to the greatest possible depth. Seeds and all necessary implements should be procured at once. Onion seed may now be sown at any time. Peas and seeds should be started towards the last of the month.

Cattle have so far gone through the Winter somewhat better than usual, and have scattered less than they have done for the last three Winters. In a few weeks the gathering season will commence, and Stockmen should see to it that their stacking yards are in good condition.

We are sorry to learn that a number of sheep in some flocks are dying. This is owing to want of proper care and attention. Experience is a dear school, but some flock-masters will not learn. The prospects are that wool will bring a good price the coming season, and consequently that sheep will advance in price. The flocks should be divided, putting those which may be ailing into separate flocks, as fast as they are sick.

MR. FOOTE'S VERSION.

In addition to Mr. Foote, we publish his account of the "personal difficulty" between himself and Judge Davidson, of which we gave an account in our last issue:—

About two o'clock in the afternoon on Thursday last, I was driving down town in front of my stable, which is situated upon the alley leading from Huerfano Street south—distant from Huerfano Street about sixty feet. At that time Mr. Davidson crossed the alley about two hundred feet south of where I was sitting. After crossing the alley he turned suddenly around and advanced to where I was sitting. At that moment two teams turned into the alley from Huerfano Street, and reached the stable at the moment that Mr. Davidson advanced on me, observing as he approached, "You were mistaken. Sir, he other day, I did not agree to take the case for you." I replied, "You did attend the case for me, and I do not want any man who has treated me as you have to speak to me. I regard you as being no better than a thief." He immediately advanced upon me in a threatening manner, plunging his right hand into the pocket of his pants in the apparent act of drawing a pistol, at the same time saying, "I'll show you, Sir, how to talk to me in that way." I immediately sprang from the wagon, and backed a few feet from him; as he continued to advance I stooped down and seized the tree of an old boot, he only having come upon the instant so convenient to the hand presented, striking like a defensive weapon; this I threw at him, he being at the time about eight feet from me, with his right hand still in the pocket of his pants. The boot tree struck him upon the side of the face or chin, when I immediately retreated behind my wagon, using it as a shield against any weapon that he might draw upon me, being myself without arms or any means of defending my person against an apparently armed attack. Mr. Davidson upon receiving the blow from the boot tree, placed his hand up to his face, and proceeded to retreat along the alley in the direction of Huerfano Street.

These are the facts which took place on that occasion, and which transpired in the presence of two persons, standing within ten feet of us. The statement that I drew a pistol upon Mr. Davidson is without any foundation in truth, as I believe all who were witness of the scene will state. I have carried no pistol upon my person since I went to New Mexico about three months since upon business in the official character of deputy sheriff. While in New Mexico I sold my pistol, and came home without one. Since then I have not owned a pistol. The difficulty between Mr. Davidson and myself has grown out of personal acts of his while receiving fees from me as my attorney, which acts, as I believe, were designedly hostile to my interests, and resulted in damage to me of several hundred dollars.

TEACHERS ATTENTION!

The public examination of teachers, prescribed by an order of El Paso County, will be held in the Reading Room, Colorado Springs, on Saturday, March 28, 1874, commencing at 9 o'clock, A. M.

Grade Certificates will be issued on the following conditions, viz:—The standing of each applicant will be marked on the scale of 100 in percentage. Those reaching a grade of fifty five will receive a third grade certificate for three months, unless a previous failure in teaching be shown. Those reaching a grade of seventy five, and having taught one term of school successfully, will receive a second grade certificate for six months; and those reaching a grade of ninety, and having taught a first class school, will receive a first grade certificate for one year. The time for which the certificate is issued in each case determines its grade. The standing on those branches which are not answered on account of time, will count as a sufficient excuse, will be deducted from the average standing of candidates.

It is desirable that persons who contemplate teaching in this County be present at this examination.

F. C. MILLINGTON,
Co. Supt. Schools.

DEAF AND DUMB ASYLUM.

A meeting of the Trustees of the Colorado Deaf and Dumb Asylum was held at Colorado Springs, on Tuesday afternoon last, at the office of Kelly & France. The Trustees present were: Dr. Breckinridge, of Denver; Mr. Wm. F. Stone, of Pueblo; and A. Z. Shelton, of Colorado City, and Messrs. France, Wolfe and Kelly, of Colorado Springs.

Officers for the ensuing three years were elected as follows: Dr. Breckinridge, President; Mr. A. Z. Shelton, Secretary; Mr. J. S. Wolfe, Treasurer. An Executive Committee was appointed, consisting of Messrs. France, Shelton and Wolfe.

It was resolved to open a School on the first of next month, and Mr. Wm. Hunter's building on Cucharas Street, near Pueblo, was rented for the purpose. Professor Ralston was appointed Principal, and Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy Steward and Matron. It is expected that the School will open with fifteen or twenty scholars.

A site on the hills to the south of town was selected for the permanent building, which will probably be commenced in the Fall.

THE LIQUOR BUSINESS.

THE MONEY AND MEN ENGAGED IN IT.

One of our correspondents sends us a certain statement of the amount of intoxicating liquors used in the United States. He says that he has obtained the figures from official documents, and that he has presented them in the following compact form so that even the casual reader may see how large, both absolute and relative, the traffic in intoxicating liquors is in this country:

Statistics showing the amount of money spent in the United States for intoxicating liquors during the year 1870, as taken from official records:

Imported and domestic distilled and spirituous liquors	$1,[illegible],000,000
Brewed and fermented liquors	23,000,000
Imported wines	15,000,000
Domestic wines	5,000,000
Total	$1,287,000,000

THE AMOUNT SPENT IN EACH STATE.

Nebraska	3,745,215
The Territories	12,169,200
Total	$1,283,991,865

According to this, $900,000,000, the cost of litigations, crimes, prisons, etc., caused in part by intemperance, and we have for a single year the enormous sum of $1,573,291,865.

The loss of flour and meal was	$530,000,000
The cost of cotton goods	115,000,000
The cost of boots and shoes	90,000,000
The cost of clothing	70,000,000
The cost of woolen goods	60,000,000
The cost of newspapers and job printing	40,000,000
Total	$905,000,000

There were 400,000 licensed liquor saloons in the United States, each having (estimated) forty daily customers, making 5,600,000 drinkers, who, it is estimated, spent their money during the year in the following proportions:

Drinkers [illegible] spent $1,000 each	$[illegible]
Drinkers [illegible] spent 900 each	[illegible]
Drinkers [illegible] spent 800 each	[illegible]
Drinkers [illegible] spent 700 each	[illegible]
Drinkers [illegible] spent 600 each	[illegible]
Drinkers [illegible] spent 500 each	[illegible]
Drinkers [illegible] spent 400 each	4,000,000
Drinkers [illegible] spent 300 each	[illegible]
Drinkers [illegible] spent 200 each	200,000,000
Drinkers [illegible] spent 150 each	150,000,000
Drinkers [illegible] spent 75 each	75,000,000
Total	Total [illegible]

The quantity of distilled, fermented, and brewed liquors drunk was sufficient to fill a canal four feet deep, fourteen feet wide, and eighty miles long; and if all the drinkers could be gathered in procession, five abreast, they would make an army 150 miles long, and if those killed by the intemperate use of spirituous liquors were there also, we should see a suicide every five minutes and five hundred and fifty-five funerals per day; and if all the places where intoxicating liquors are sold were placed in rows, in direct lines, they would make a street one hundred miles long.

There were 200,000 more persons engaged in the liquor business in the United States than in preaching the Gospel and teaching; and from the effects of intoxicating drinks 100,000 are annually sent to prisons, 150,000 to drunkards' graves, and 200,000 children are reduced to want. The total number of persons engaged in the business is 560,000, of which 53,663 are employed in making and selling annually 5,685,333 barrels of beer.

It is estimated that the clergy of the United States cost annually $12,000,000; the lawyers, criminals, prisons, etc., $90,000,000, and intoxicating liquors, as before said, $905,000,000.

The State of Pennsylvania spent during the year 1870, for liquors of all kinds, $153,663,495; and for schools and teaching, 5,865,729. She has engaged in the liquor business 78,800 persons, 16,870 school teachers, and 22,000 criminals,—four-fifths of whom were made so by strong drink.

The City of Philadelphia had 2,160 drinking places, and spent for intoxicating drinks $30,000,000 in one year. Chicago had 2,300 liquor saloons, and spent for intoxicating liquors $14,000,000. Newark had 864 drinking saloons, and spent for strong drinks $5,500,000.

The City of New York had 7,000 licensed drinking saloons, which, if placed in rows in direct lines, would make a street like Broadway thirteen miles long. She spent for intoxicating liquors $60,000,000 during the year 1870, and there were employed in the business 35,000 persons. She has four hundred and fifty churches and chapels, and there were engaged in preaching and teaching the public and private schools 3,000 persons, all of whom to support, cost $2,500,000. The total sum invested in the liquor business of this nation, amounted to $140,000,000; in the manufacturing business $60,000,000; and the banking business $80,000,000. The Police Department cost $3,000,000, and in public amusements $5,000,000 were spent. The meat bill was $20,000,000, flour $28,000,000, and the daily consumption of beer was 20,000 kegs. There were 62,000 arrested for intoxication and disorderly conduct, and 80,000,000 persons were in institutions under care of the Commissioners of Public Charities.—N. Y. Tel.

Gail Hamilton, writing on disadvantages, in her "Twelve months from a Lenox," comments as follows upon sending girls to school over the railroad: "They cheapen themselves. They lose, if they never possessed, they destroy before they are old enough to see the divinity that should hedge a woman. They fall into—I can hardly dignify it with the name of flirtation—but into a tampering sort of communication with unknown men, employees of the railroad, and season travelers—a traffic which is fatal to dignity in woman and insures no reverence in man. And this passes for liveliness and attractiveness, or at most, perhaps, it is being a little with that it is liveliness which girls cannot afford. Delicacy is not a thing which can be lost and found. No art can restore to the grape its bloom; and the supreme charm of the grape is its bloom. Familiarity without love, without confidence, without honor, is destructive to all that raises woman from clay and schooling."

Please excuse an air question; there may be an "I" in your case, you wonder why.

INFORMATION FOR STRANGERS.

COLORADO.

To borrow the expression of a well-known writer, the Territory of Colorado straddles the Rocky Mountains like a saddle—a part of it hanging on their eastern flank, a part on their western flank, and a part of it being taken up by the mountains themselves. It lies between the 37th and 41st parallels of north latitude, and the 102nd and 109th meridians of west longitude, being bounded on the north by Wyoming and Nebraska, and on the east by Nebraska and Kansas, and on the south by New Mexico, and on the west by Utah. The area embraced forms nearly a square, containing about 106,475 square miles, or 67,400,000 acres—a greater extent of country than all of Great Britain, with a colony or two included, and quite as large as New York, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts, with New Jersey thrown in for good measure."

For many reasons, Colorado is one of the most remarkable sections of country on the face of the earth.

Though not geographically, it is, really, the centre of the North American Continent. Up to its giant peaks, there is a gradual slope on every side, from the Atlantic on the east, the Pacific on the west, the Gulf of Mexico on the south, and the confines of the Polar Sea on the north.

The dwellers on its "plains" or lower lands, live, on the average, about a mile above the level of the sea; while those who live in its "mountain towns," are lifted still nearer heaven.

Its scenery is magnificently grand. Its climate is deliciously cheering and healthful. The clear air and the bright sunshine, which continue by characterize it, act like a charm upon the system, invigorating the nervous powers and inducing constant "good spirits." The dryness and purity of the atmosphere render it especially suitable for such as are of consumptive or asthmatic tendencies, or suffer from any affection of the throat or lungs; such—unless the disease has obtained too firm a grip—are almost certain to regain health and strength.

The resources of the country are almost limitless and innumerable.

Its mountains are seamed and streaked with precious wealth of all kinds—gold and silver, copper and lead, coal and iron.

Cradled in their brawny arms and lying at their outspread feet, are peaceful valleys, whereon the farmer raises crops of rich abundance. Owing to the small rainfall, irrigation is necessary to the cultivation of the soil; but this, when understood, is comparatively little labor, and far more than compensated for by the great yield which is obtained.

Eastward from the mountains, the "great plains" stretch in almost boundless extent, covered with rich grasses, which render them the best pastures in the world. Sheep and cattle thrive upon them with but little care, and with few exceptions, through the winter as well as the summer. During the fall, the dryness of the atmosphere cures the grasses, sealing up in them all their nutritious qualities and leaving them standing upon the ground as nature's hay—a winter stock of feed, needing no preparation and no housing.

The foot-Hills are covered with timber, and contain almost every variety of building stone. Some of the rivers afford water-power of the finest character.

In short, Colorado offers all the natural resources necessary for carrying on the three great productive industries—Mining, Agriculture, and Manufactures—and all the attractions of Scenery and Climate calculated to make it a wealthful and delightful home.

EL PASO COUNTY.

El Paso County is one of the central counties of the Territory and embraces a fair share of its principal physical characteristics—mountain, valley and plain. Along its northern border stretches the Great Colorado "Divide," a pine-covered mountain spur, which takes its name from the fact that it separates the sections of country tributary to the chief rivers of the Territory, the Platte in the north and the Arkansas in the south. From the "Divide" the county has a continual slope southward, its southern boundary being eighteen miles north of the Arkansas, the distance from north to south being about forty-two miles. This southward slope—exposing the whole of the county, like a garden wall, to the full sunlight—has a marked effect upon its climate characteristics. The distance from the eastern boundary of the county to the foot of the mountains, is about forty miles, and beyond that, the county embraces about thirty miles of mountainous country, making the total width about seventy miles. The area includes about 1,035,000 acres, of which upwards of 94,000 acres has been entered.

Though Pike's Peak—the great focal point of the gold excitement which first brought Colorado into notice—is situated in this county, there are few, if any, known valuable deposits of the precious metals. Hence, El Paso county has no place amongst the mining counties of the Territory. It has, however, the advantage of a market in the mining districts to the west, which are reached by the Ute Pass. These mining districts are rapidly growing into great importance, being amongst the richest in the Territory, and will cause a large demand for agricultural and other products.

Most of the agricultural land which can be watered directly—that is, by ditches taken out of the creeks—is already taken up, and such land is now worth from $20 to $40 per acre. Experiments, however, will shortly be made in the matter of artesian wells, and, if they prove successful, thousands of acres of the most tempting land—still open for pre-emption—will be made available for irrigation and cultivation. Scattered through the mountains are numerous small patches, or "parks," on which grains and vegetables of the first quality can be raised to even greater advantage than in the lower valleys.

In like manner, most of the land available for stock ranges, having water upon it, has been taken up, and ranches command from $500 to $3,000. There can be no doubt, however, that almost anywhere on the plains, wells could be sunk at a small expense, from which water could be drawn by wind mills or other means. Necessity has not yet driven the people to invention, but will do so ere long, as every succeeding year makes more and more manifest the fact that that country which has been regarded as valueless is in reality of the most valuable character, with a little trouble is taken to aid Nature by the contrivances of art.

The progress of the Stock Interests of the county may be gathered from the following figures taken from the Assessor's reports for 1871 and 1872. In the former year there were 779 horses, 199 mules, 2,731 cows, 2,321 oxen, 3,038 sheep, and 539 swine. In 1872, there were 910 horses, 96 mules, 6,066 cows, 1,145 oxen, 6,338 calves, 30,314 sheep, and 913 swine. Last year, the wool crop of the county amounted to 174,812 pounds.

The Lumber Trade is an important part of the business of the county, there being fourteen mills constantly engaged in it, and more lumber land in El Paso county than in any other county in the Territory.

COLORADO SPRINGS.

The town of Colorado Springs is situated in the centre of El Paso county, at a point where the Monument Creek enters with the Fontaine qui Bouille, and where the Ute Pass opens upon the plains.

It is a principal station on the Denver and Rio Grande Railway, seventy-six miles south of Denver (the metropolis of the Territory), and forty-two miles north of Pueblo.

The town takes its name from numerous valuable mineral springs in the immediate neighborhood. The most important of these are grouped together about five miles to the west, in a beautiful glen, to which has been given the name of Manitou. These are the celebrated "Boiling Springs," which, years ago, were made known to the world by Fremont, Buxton, and other writers. Formerly they were visited on account of their medicinal virtues by the native tribes of Indians, who regarded them as supernatural phenomena caused by the direct action of the Great Spirit. In latter times, notwithstanding the difficulty of access to them, their fame has attracted large numbers of invalids, anxious to avail themselves of the healing waters. During the last two years, a large amount has been expended in laying out and adorning the ground in the neighborhood handsome, commodious, and comfortable hotels have been built, bath houses have been fitted up, and many other conveniences provided. Now that these famous springs are so easily accessible, and that every provision has been made for the comfort of visitors, there can be no doubt that a few years will suffice to make them as attractive a point as is Saratoga in the East. Thousands will throng to them every year, and many will take up permanent abodes around them. The springs are seven in number, and are useful both for drinking and bathing purposes, being highly beneficial in rheumatism, skin diseases, general debility, and numerous other ailments which we need not catalogue.

In addition to these wonderful springs, some of the most remarkable and magnificent scenery on the American Continent is in proximity to the town.

Directly in front is Pike's Peak, the most celebrated of the Rocky Mountains, rising to a height of upwards of 14,000 feet above sea level, its head covered with snow all the year. Right and left of the Peak is a long range of "Foot-Hills" (lofty mountains they would be termed in any other land), "infinitely diversified with variety of form and outline, with rocky crags and timbered bowlders and smooth slopes, with constant play of light and shade, with contrast of rich and sombre colors, with streaks of snow and dark groves of pine"—the whole forming a panorama of exceeding beauty of which the eye never tires.

Three miles from town is the wonderful and famous "Garden of the Gods," in which huge rocks, hundreds of feet high, and of the most fantastic shapes, and gorgeous colors, form a scene which excites the wonder of all who behold it. Close to the Garden is "Glen Eyrie," (within Queen's Canon, equally wonderful and beautiful. Five miles to the southwest of the town is "Cheyenne Canon," a magnificent gorge, whose stupendous walls of rock and beautiful waterfalls give it an almost unrivaled grandeur. Twelve miles north is "Monument Park," studded with groups of lofty columns of sandstone, which look like statues of some long-gone race of giants. Immediately beyond Manitou, are the Rainbow Falls, the Canon and Falls of the Fountain, and the Ute Pass. Nature, in all directions, has scenes of grandeur and of beauty. "The advantage of this point," says a recent writer, "is that it lets you at once into the heart of the mountains."

The Springs and the Scenery combined are destined, of themselves, to build up a town of considerable size and importance. Here will be a place of resort—of a more unequaled attractions—known the world over. Last year thousands of visitors, from almost every State in the Union, and from foreign lands, and each succeeding season will bring an increasing throng; while many, who are in search of health, have already chosen it as their permanent home, and many more will settle here in order to secure the same inestimable boon.

Everything possible is being done to add to the attractive character of a spot to which Nature has bestowed so many advantages. It is intended to make Colorado Springs not only famous as a Sanitarium, but also as an educational centre, and a home of refined society. Large reservations have been made for schools and church institutions, and the town, although yet in its infancy, has undertaken the erection of a costly school-house. Wide streets and avenues and spacious squares have been laid out, and evidences of taste have not been spared.

Ample funds will accumulate to carry on the work of beautifying the town, of erecting public buildings, and of constructing necessary public works. The town is a Colony Town, and the whole of the profits derived from the sale of the Colony lots and lands are appropriated to public improvements. The land having been bought in large parcels at low rates, and being sold to colonists in small lots at advanced figures, many thousands of dollars will thus be devoted to the purposes named.

Persons may become colonists by purchasing certificates of membership, which are of four prices, according to the privileges conveyed: $50, $75; $150, $200. A certificate entitles a member to locate certain lots and lands. These are of three denominations: "Business Lots," 25 feet by 100 feet, ranging in prices from $100 to $250; "Residence Lots," 50 feet by 100 feet, and 100 feet by 100 feet, ranging in prices from $50 to $150; "Outlying Tracts," of the following sizes and prices: One-acre tracts, $150; five-acre tracts, $50; ten-acre tracts, $30 to $50 an acre; twenty-acre tracts, $20 to $40 an acre; forty-acre tracts, $15 to $20. A $50 certificate entitles its holder to locate a $50 residence lot; a $25 certificate, any residence lot irrespective of price; a $50 certificate, to locate a business and residence lot, or a business lot and outlying tract, or a residence lot and outlying tract, provided the total value of the lands located does not exceed $300; a $100 certificate, to locate similar lots as the previous, but irrespective of price. The amount paid for the certificate is credited for the lots located, and the balance (if the value of the lots exceeds that of the certificate) can be paid any time within twelve months of the location (or of the first location, if more than one is made upon the same certificate). Members may take out as many certificates as they please, but are bound to make one improvement (that is to put up a house, or make some equivalent expenditure) for each certificate within four months of making the first location upon it. Upon this being done, and payment of the lots completed, deeds are given conveying full title, with one condition, however—that no intoxicating liquors shall ever be sold on such lots in any premises having the character of a place of public resort; breach of this condition involves forfeiture of the property.

The lands adjoining the town, of which the Colony possess about 10,000 acres, are excellently adapted for cultivation. A great portion is almost as flat as a table, with an exceedingly slight slope, so that it can be irrigated with the utmost facility. Irrigating canals have been constructed, and large reservoirs for the purpose of storing water as an insurance against exceptionally dry seasons. The soil is rich and the soil are especially suitable for the cultivation of small fruits, and for these a ready market will be found, in addition to the supply required by the Town, and by the mines not far away, a company has been formed for the purpose of establishing a Canning Factory in the Town so soon as the quantity of fruit grown shall exceed the home consumption.

The progress already made by the Town, has been astonishingly rapid. Up to date—that is, little more than two years from the commencement of the enterprise—there have been 550 certificates of membership taken out, on most of which two locations have been made. The population, according to the nearest estimate we can form, is between twenty and twenty-five hundred. The various institutions necessary to a well ordered community, have been quickly got into working order. There are two churches built, two in course of erection, and two or three others contemplated, a graded public school with four teachers, and about three hundred scholars, two newspapers and printing offices, post-office, telegraph office, U. S. Signal office, two banks, several large stores of all kinds, we located—where the luxuries as well as the necessaries of life can be obtained—livery stables, etc. The Town has been organized with trustees and other officers, and several companies have been formed for the prosecution of important commercial undertakings—including a steam saw mill in active operation, brick-manufacture, fruit-canning, etc. In short, the basis has been well laid for growing progress and prosperity.

To such, therefore, as are seeking new homes, Colorado Springs offer advantages of the highest order.
